Justice for Malice Green!

Punish racist, anti-worker police now!

On Thursday, November 5, between 10:30 and 11:00 p.m., Detroit police viciously beat to death a 35-year-old African-American man, Malice Green.

Witnesses say police entered Green's car, beat Green on the hands and the chest. Then other police arrived, dragged Green, in a daze, out of his car, beat him in the face, chest, and stomach, and stood on his neck as they handcuffed him. Green went into a seizure, was taken in an EMS unit to Detroit Receiving Hospital, and arrived dead.

Mayor Coleman Young and Chief of Police Stanley Knox have both condemned the beating. Six white police and one Black policeman involved have been suspended without pay. Young and Knox have also ordered an investigation and say that after the investigation, there may be criminal charges against some of the police. But, so far, no warrants have been issued, no arrests have been made, no charges have been made.

This shows once again that there are two sets of laws in the U.S. — one for rich whites and the racist, anti-worker police selected to serve and protect them and their property; another for poor Blacks and poor whites. If a poor Black, or a poor white, beat to death a rich white, in full view of many witnesses, do you think he would be out and about "pending an investigation"?

It also shows that working people in Detroit cannot rely on Coleman Young or Stanley Knox to lead the struggle to get justice for Malice Green, punish these racist, anti-worker police, and compensate Malice Green's family.

People elected Young to get rid of the racist, anti-worker police force that acted like an occupying army. The brutal murder of Malice Green shows that Young may have changed the surface color of the police force, but the white racist core remains, ready and waiting to be used when necessary against the thousands of Black working people in the Detroit area. Larry Nevers, one who beat Green, was a member of one of the infamous STRESS units. Why is he still on the force? People in the area say they call Nevers and his partner Budzyn "Starsky and Hutch," that they harass and abuse people in the area every day.

Young hasn't gotten rid of the racist, anti-worker police force because he is totally owned and controlled by the rich families who own GM, Ford, and Chrysler, who need a racist, anti-worker police force to keep down the people in Detroit.

The workers in the factories must lead this fight. They must use their positions, their ties, their organization, in the factories and in the unions, to organize this fight and gather the oppressed population in working class schools and neighborhoods around them.

Every trade union local must be forced to take a stand on the side of the people and use its resources to fight for the interests of the people.

If it could happen to Malice Green, it could happen to any poor worker in Detroit.

Justice for Malice Green!
Punish racist, anti-worker police now! ■

"It's not a place in jail for them. They need to get the electrical chair ... They just beat him unmercifully. If I had my say, they'd be right where my son is." — Patricia Green, mother of Malice Green, murdered by Detroit police.

Women and the labor party movement

Women have definitely made progress toward independence and equality in the last decades. Most women have jobs; some women even have jobs that pay enough for them to support themselves and children without a great deal of difficulty.

But thousands and thousands of women workers, unemployed women, and their children, still live in the midst of total poverty, ignorance, abuse, and violence. The vast majority of working class women, and many middle class women, still don't make enough money to support themselves and children without a great deal of difficulty. This is the first step to the liberation of women from centuries of oppression. Without the ability to support themselves and children, women cannot even begin to be independent and equal.

Women also need the society as a whole to assume responsibility for caring for children, through high-quality, professional, 24-hour, low-cost childcare centers. Both women and men, from the youngest to the oldest, need to be totally re-educated in a spirit of respect and concern for the total development of women and their abilities.

Neither the Republican Party nor the Democratic Party will ever lead this struggle, not simply because they are dominated by men, — this can change —, but, above all, because they are totally owned and controlled by the same rich families — the men and the women — who have been profiting from the exploitation and oppression of the vast majority of women.

These families benefit from unemployment, low wages, and minimal social services. Unemployment, low wages, and minimal social services, keep wages down, profits up.

After World War II, U.S. banks and corporations became "number one" throughout the world. They made fantastic profits; they could afford to make some concessions to some women for the sake of social peace. Thus it was that more women got jobs, the right to abortion, etc.; some women got better jobs, more money, more respect, etc.

But this period is over. U.S. banks and corporations are losing their number one position. They are trying to cut costs to be competitive. There aren't going to be any more costly concessions to anybody without big battles, still less the massive investment necessary for decent jobs, childcare, education, etc., in the interests of women.

The working class is the only class that working class women and middle class women can rely on to fight for what they need. The working class is the only class in this society that has everything to gain and nothing to lose from the total liberation of women.

Decent, well-paying jobs for all women means increasing the size of the working class and the wealth of the working class. High quality, professional, 24-hour childcare, means taking a tremendous burden off the shoulders of the working class. It means working class children can grow up more whole and free, with the opportunities that other children have, not as their parents did. It means that working class parents can enjoy their time with their children rather than being forced to work for them or make them work. Reeducating women and men in a spirit of respect and concern for the development of women and their abilities means ridding the working class of tension and conflicts that undermine its solidarity and deprive it of joy.

But, in order to do this, working women and working men need their own political party. They need to get out from under the influence of the Republican and Democratic Parties that teach working class women that they are stupid, that they aren't capable of doing anything but the most menial tasks, that teach working class men to hate women, to blame women for their problems, instead of the rich bosses.

This is why we urge all working class women, and women of all classes devoted to the liberation of women, to support, join, and build, Labor Party Advocates.

Labor Party Advocates is open to all for a labor party based on the unions, no matter what their political or religious views may be.

At this point Labor Party Advocates is made up largely of men — trade union officials, pro-labor intellectuals, and socialists. This is not surprising. These are the people who are most likely to have the time and the confidence to figure out what they think, and to try to do something about it.

But if working class women, and all women devoted to the liberation of women, set aside a little bit of time to join this party, build this party, and make it into a big party of working class women and men who are with them, we will take a big step toward building a totally different world for ourselves and our children. — M. Guttschall ■

BRIEFLY

First the white racist opposition to the Malcolm X Academy resumed its activities. Then white policemen — 47% of the Detroit police force is still white — beat to death a 35-year-old Black man. This is not accidental. White racist families who own and control everything in the U.S. are deliberately trying to pit whites against Blacks. Upper class Blacks are incapable of defending the Black people against these attacks because they themselves are tied to rich white families and are engaged in their own attacks on the Black population. Witness Young's attacks on the city workers; the school board's attacks on the teachers' union and people throughout Detroit with its channeling of public and private resources into a small number of elite schools. Working class candidates for Detroit mayor and city council are needed to unite workers of all races against white racist forces and those who go along with them.

Young Black gunmen entered several schools in Detroit and opened fire on students. This violence is a result of two things: rich white families and their Black agents trafficking in drugs and guns in Detroit; the lack of decent jobs, homes, and schools for Black youth. This, too, shows that we need working class candidates for Detroit mayor and city council who will use their positions to mobilize working people of all races against the rich whites and to fight for decent jobs, schools and homes for all against the rich owners of GM, Ford, and Chrysler.

The U.S. government has threatened to raise tariffs on some products from Europe in an effort to force European governments to stop subsidies to European farmers. Workers must oppose these tariffs which mean higher prices for U.S. workers and lead to trade war which hurts workers.

We don't yet have results for working class candidates for president and vice president in the U.S. But we do know that Workers World Party candidates for various education boards in the state of Michigan got from 55,000 to 98,000 votes, the highest votes for working class candidates for office in recent years!

Truth sold 33 copies of the last issue of Truth at a meatpacking plant, an auto plant, and other places in the Detroit area. We also passed out 500 leaflets urging workers to write-in working class candidates for president and vice-president, James Warren and Estelle Debates, and to vote for other working class candidates on the ballot. ■

Should African-American workers support Labor Party Advocates?

Labor Party Advocates was formed over a year ago. It's the largest independent working class political organization in the United States. But it is still relatively small; its membership is still relatively restricted to trade union officials, trade union activists, pro-labor intellectuals, and socialists. There aren't many African-American trade unionists involved; there aren't many African-American workers involved.

Our tendency has been working to recruit African-American workers to Labor Party Advocates. We have found many who are sympathetic, but very few who are willing to join Labor Party Advocates at this time.

Other tendencies have been discouraging African-American workers from joining Labor Party Advocates.

Some say African-American workers shouldn't join LPA because it is largely white and it hasn't yet taken a position in favor of demands important to African-American people — like affirmative action programs, or reparations.

Others say that African-American workers shouldn't join LPA because it is initiated by and dominated by reformist trade union leaders, there aren't now, and there may never be, thousands of workers involved in it.

But these arguments don't deal with the fundamental problems facing the African-American people in their struggle for their liberation.

The African-American people are a minority within the territory of the United States. If they are ever going to be truly equal and free here, they are going to have to have some support from some section of the rest of the population.

There has always been a small minority of white people who have actively supported the struggles of the African-American or Black people as if they were their own: in the 1800s — the abolitionists; in the 1900s — the revolutionary socialists and communists. (There is lots of talk about Malcolm X today; no one says that revolutionary socialists, Trotskyists, were the only political tendency that actively defended Malcolm X, published and distributed his writings.) A larger group of white people has been convinced to make some concessions to the Black people as a result of their struggle. But the vast majority of white people don't actively support the struggle of the Black people for equality and freedom.

Why not?

Some Black religious groups say that whites are evil by nature. This is understandable, but it's not correct.

The problem is really more one of education and training. Whites are constantly bombarded with propaganda telling them that they should support the struggle of Black people for moral reasons, that the struggle of Black people is of no interest to them, or, that it is against their interests. This propaganda starts from the time they are very young, and it never stops.

Most white people don't realize that the struggle of the Black people for equality and freedom is in the direct, material interests of the vast majority of white people in the U.S. The more Black people overcome the barriers of prejudice and discrimination, the more they are found throughout the society, rather than in disproportionate numbers at the bottom, the clearer it will be that the basic divisions in the society are class divisions, not race divisions. And the more unified and homogeneous the working class will be, which will in turn make it easier for the working class to take power, expand the size of the working class, abolish hunger and want, and, eventually, do away with oppressive social classes.

But the vast majority of white people are not going to be able to see that they have a direct material stake in the struggles of the Black or African-American people as long as they are under the influence of the rich families that rule the U.S. and their political parties, the Republicans and Democrats, as long as they are constantly bombarded with their propaganda.

The formation of Labor Party Advocates represents a crack in this mind-control machine. Suddenly there are a small number of trade union officials, activists, intellectuals out there saying that the Republicans and Democrats don't have all the answers, that workers need their own party, and they need to build an organization to build their own party.

This is an opportunity for African-American workers, and the vast majority of African-American people ...

... to encourage white working people to get out from under the influence of the Republicans and Democrats and, in so doing, help create the conditions in which it will be possible to win a sizeable majority of the white population to the struggle for the liberation of the African-American people ...

... to organize themselves independently of the Republicans and Democrats, and in a large way.

African-American working people can not only join Labor Party Advocates, they can form a caucus within it to fight for what they think is necessary. They can also continue to belong to other organizations. Labor Party Advocates is open to all for a labor party based on the unions no matter what their political or religious views may be. So it doesn't exclude membership in other organizations.

Obviously, there are no guarantees. The trade union leaders who initiated Labor Party Advocates may be so worried about offending pro-Democratic Party trade union leaders and so worried that Labor Party Advocates might get away from them, that they keep Labor Party Advocates from going anywhere. But workers who join Labor Party Advocates and do their best to build it, will learn from this experience and gather together forces devoted to the fight.

And what are the alternatives? Hoping Clinton will do something for the people? Hoping Jesse Jackson will do something for the people? Hoping the Democratic Party will change? But these men and this party are owned by the rich white families who profit from the oppression of the African-American people and the consequent division of the working class.

Building a smaller group, more supportive of African-American people and their struggles from the very beginning? But why counterpose the two things? Shouldn't the one nurture the other?

African-Americans have never gotten anything without a fight. Joining and building Labor Party Advocates is an opportunity to do this, and win the majority of the U.S. population to this fight. ■

Why socialists should join and build LPA

All socialists, all Trotskyists, should join and build Labor Party Advocates as an important step toward a big workers party based on the unions. It is an important step in the struggle to lift the heavy weight of the Democratic Party politicians, the top layer of the trade union leadership, off of the workers' struggle. It is only through supporting this effort that socialists and workers will learn the lessons necessary for the next stage of the class struggle.

Some socialists, particularly the Socialist Workers Party (SWP), say that supporting LPA is wrong. The arguments reduce themselves to two that are connected: first, that LPA was created by trade union bureaucrats because their own salaries and jobs were threatened; that these bureaucrats don't want to really break from the Democratic Party, they merely want to pressure it; that the program put forward by these bureaucrats is a program to reform capitalism. Second, that the workers haven't really built a big movement that could have created LPA or a labor party and so LPA is not tied at all to the workers' mobilizations, and is therefore merely a creation of the bureaucrats.

These socialists say that workers should: support the current strike struggles going on; discuss political questions with their fellow workers; try to fight the owners of the big corporations whenever they think they can win; and, join a small socialist group.

Let us concede that all the arguments raised against LPA are true. It is true that LPA was created, to a certain extent, by trade union bureaucrats fearful of the loss of their salaries; that they don't really want to break with the Democratic Party, they merely want to pressure it; that they may want to divert LPA into a pressure group on the Democratic Party, and never found a labor party, and they may succeed in doing that.

And, it is true that the workers haven't really built a big strike movement, lots of demonstrations, etc., so that a big labor party can emerge from these mobilizations.

But this is one-sided. The other side is: to the extent that the U.S. workers have begun to break from the Democratic and Republican parties, this has found an expression in LPA.

LPA is one of the political expressions in the workers movement of the growing hostility of millions of workers to the Democratic and Republican parties because they are parties of the rich. This was demonstrated in the elections through the existence of the Perot candidacy, the endless stream of surveys indicating deep dissatisfaction with Clinton, as well as Bush and Perot, and the high voter turnout. In Michigan, which has a large working class population, the voter turnout was the highest since 1956.

Irrespective of what the trade union bureaucrats think or say they are doing, LPA represents this change. For example, while the trade union bureaucrats may be using LPA to fight for their jobs, and while they may have a reformist program, the political content of LPA is quite explicit — it is open to all who are for a labor party. It has no program and states explicitly that this program will be developed at a convention at a later date. The political structure is relatively loose. At least in Detroit, anyone can come to an LPA meeting who wants to be an LPA member and speak relatively openly. Socialists and communists are not excluded. This structure reflects the interests of the workers, the desire of the workers, and not the bureaucrats (as either those fighting for their own salaries or as agents for the rich).

The framework is not so alien to workers — LPA is an organization founded and supported by a 100,000 member union, the OCAW, with all the pluses and minuses that such support means today. This framework imposes the fewest demands on the workers, and places the fewest restrictions on their development today. A real organization toward a labor party with all the warts, all the problems, of the U.S. workers movement today.

Why should our attitude toward LPA be any different from our attitude toward a trade union organizing drive or a strike? Do these bureaucrats ever call a strike or organizing drive for different reasons than protecting their own salaries? Strikes and organizing drives deserve our unconditional support against the capitalists in spite of the fact that most are bureaucratically controlled, lack militant tactics, or even occur with less than enthusiastic support from some workers.

We support all of the actions proposed by these socialists — fight the bosses when the workers can, discuss politics, join a small socialist group. But why do these socialists insist on counterposing this activity to supporting LPA?

These socialists do not support any effort toward a labor party based on the unions against the capitalists and against the pro-imperialist agents in the unions.

Instead, they are selective in what efforts by the workers they will support. They have mapped out a schema for the development of a labor party and since reality does not match this development, they reject reality.

They demand that certain sectarian "norms," developed from the past, outside of the class struggle, must be met before a movement meets with their approval.

For example, the SWP says that LPA must totally break with the framework of capitalist politics. An election campaign by socialists does not "totally" break with the framework of capitalist politics. It is a certain concession to the capitalist political framework for the purpose of reaching the masses of workers. The only difference is that LPA is a united front of different tendencies and the socialist campaign they can run themselves without confronting the problems of the first efforts toward a labor party.

Those of us who try to recruit workers to LPA realize how difficult it is for workers to join LPA. But it is easier for workers to join LPA than it is for workers to join a small socialist group. Workers involved in LPA learn almost immediately of the difficulties of changing other workers' thinking about the need for a labor party. Workers learn about all the different socialist organizations — the middle class socialists, and the working class socialists. Workers have begun to learn to work together with those they disagree with, to discuss together about a labor party.

It is possible that the hesitation to support LPA is cynicism about the progress that the workers can make with the organizations they themselves have created, the unions, and LPA, and the progress the workers can make against the bureaucrats. Or that some of these socialists have ties to the 100% Democratic Party wing of the trade unions, or want to, and find taking sides in this dispute too risky, especially since LPA may turn out a flop. In both cases, the position represents a concession to the petty bourgeoisie, and reveals how powerful these forces are on socialist organizations.

In any case, refusing to support LPA yields the big political terrain to imperialist and middle class politicians. It means limiting the workers' place in the society to the struggle for economic demands and enforcing their exclusion from political life and from confronting the problems of leading all the discontented classes against the rich and their politicians.

The road to a labor party in the U.S. today passes through joining and building LPA. Only through these experiences can the workers learn the historic task of their class and how to accomplish it in the living struggle of the classes. — J. Marlowe ■

75 years of the Russian revolution

November 7th is the 75th anniversary of the Russian revolution.

The bourgeois press tries to portray the Russian revolution as a coup organized by a tiny Bolshevik party in opposition to the masses of people.

In fact, the Russian revolution in October, 1917, — October by the Russian calendar at that time; November by our calendar — was the first time that millions of workers overthrew the imperialists, the czar, the military, the landowners, the factory owners, got power for themselves, and held it for any length of time.

Today, U.S. imperialists, together with the privileged bureaucracy in Russia, continue to try to totally overthrow the power of the workers in Russia. They are trying to take away legal ownership of the basic resources in Russia from the working people. They are trying to break up the nationalized economy, with all its weaknesses, and transform it into a series of privately owned enterprises aimed at enriching the owners at the expense of the people. They are trying to pit Russian workers, who are relatively privileged in relationship to workers and oppressed of other nationalities within the old USSR, against workers and oppressed of other nationalities, and prevent these oppressed nationalities from separating and establishing their own, separate and independent nations.

But what the imperialists and the privileged bureaucrats (the descendants of Stalin) want, and what they are going to get, are not necessarily the same thing.

Yeltsin recently announced that he is going to have to slow down his plans to privatize Russian industry because he is afraid of a popular uprising. He also announced that he is not going to withdraw troops from Lithuania, Latvia, and Estonia. He says he is concerned about the rights of Russian workers in these territories. Since when? He is obviously concerned that things will get out of control and that the power of the privileged bureaucracy he serves will be further undermined. Workers and oppressed peoples throughout the old USSR are hostile to the privileged bureaucracy and want to get rid of it. This privileged bureaucracy and its armed forces are the only forces that imperialists can rely on. They can't rely on workers to do their bidding.

What can workers and socialists in the U.S. do to defend and advance the gains of the Russian revolution?

1. Support the struggles of all workers and oppressed peoples in the old USSR against the privileged bureaucracy, including the struggles of oppressed peoples for the right of self-determination, for the right to separate. Fight for a revolutionary working class and popular democracy made up of the workers and oppressed in arms, for the total destruction of the privileged bureaucracy and its armed forces.

2. Support the struggles of all workers and oppressed peoples against U.S. imperialism, including and especially the movement for a big labor party based on the unions in the U.S.

3. Fight for the reconstruction of the Fourth International, the world party of the socialist revolution, the only force within the international workers movement that has made a consistent struggle for the revolutionary overthrow of the privileged bureaucracy in the old USSR and the various imperialist and bourgeois regimes.

In the final analysis, the fate of the Russian revolution depends on the construction of an international revolutionary leadership, whether it takes the form of the reconstruction of the Fourth International, or the foundation of a new International to continue its revolutionary tradition. Such a leadership is necessary to overthrow the privileged bureaucracy, and to overthrow one or more imperialist regimes in the advanced capitalist countries. Both Lenin and Trotsky said very clearly that the Russian workers would never be able to hold out without help from the workers in the advanced capitalist countries. They didn't mean help just in the form of solidarity; they meant help in the form of taking political power; concrete material aid in the form of men, women, machines, etc. The situation in the old USSR, China, and Cuba, shows this. Those of us in the West need to play our part. We need to build revolutionary workers parties to fight for political power and socialism. Partisans of Leninism-Trotskyism and the Fourth International should make a common fight for this goal. This is the first step.—M.G.

FROM OUR READERS

We are printing a short interview with a reader of Truth in Detroit. He is especially interested in bringing socialists together.

Truth: Why do you think it is important for African-American people to see the class differences that exist in this society?

L: I think that most African-Americans already know, in various ways, about the underside and topside of privilege and affluence in terms of social divisions of labor, through institutions like the family, the school, and the church. The important concern, for me, is what can socialists (African-American and otherwise) do to fully appreciate how the recognition of social divisions become pertinent, for us, in the form of opposition rather than accommodation.

T: What do you see in socialism and Marxism?

L: For me, socialism and Marxism are utopian social and cultural traditions made up of people who, in certain ways, no long experience "being modern" as freedom, certainty and progress but as misery, doubt and corruption.

T: Why have you been trying to organize a forum on the 1992 elections, made up of socialists of different tendencies?

L: I believe that dialogue (and other kinds of interaction) among different socialists is a prerequisite for appreciating, in new ways, who we are (as socialists) and the changing realities of struggle.

T: What has been your experience with this project?

L: The response hasn't been enthusiastic, but encouraging nonetheless.

T: What do you think needs to be done today to advance the fight for socialism?

L: I believe that the fight for socialist ideals rests among all socialists who choose mutual respect and alliance over sectarianism, and who replace ideological orthodoxy with a sense of belief as fallible yet enabling. ■

Clinton won't bring jobs!

Join the labor party movement!

Thousands of workers and middle class people voted for Bill Clinton on November 3. They did so because they hate Bush and voting for Clinton seemed to them to be the only way to get rid of Bush at this time.

They also think that Clinton is the one most likely to bring jobs, or least likely to make things worse. This isn't surprising. The media, trade union leaders, church leaders, have been saying this for months. So it's easy for workers to forget that Clinton ...

... is the head of an anti-union, "right-to-work" state,

... that he called on workers throughout the U.S. to follow the example of GM workers in Arlington, Texas, who agreed to tear up parts of their union contract so that GM bosses would keep their plant open and close the Willow Run, Michigan plant instead,

... that he called for more police to put down the popular uprising in Los Angeles in solidarity with Rodney King; these police shot to death and wounded dozens of innocent African-American and Hispanic youth, arrested and imprisoned thousands without trial ...

Clinton is not going to bring jobs to workers. He is going to make things worse for workers. He has been lying to the people and he is going to keep lying to the people in order to try to gain time for the richest families in the U.S. They need more time to prepare their solution to their problems — cutting more jobs, cutting more wages, benefits, and social services, smashing unions, pitting whites against Blacks, men against women, war on the Iraqis and other peoples, so that they can increase their profits and power.

The popular uprising in Los Angeles scared the richest families in the U.S. That's why they shifted support from Bush to Clinton. They decided they need someone in the White House who could placate the people for a while, that they needed more time, that they weren't ready to confront the people yet.

It's a matter of time before millions of working people see this. There are going to be massive working class and popular struggles — meetings, demonstrations, strikes, working class election campaigns.

The outcome of these struggles will depend on how unified and organized millions of working people are. This is why we urge all working people to join the movement for a labor party based on the unions. Working people need their own independent political party. They need an organization that brings together millions of working people — union and non-union, employed and unemployed, men and women, white, African-American, Arab, Hispanic, Asian — and that addresses all the problems facing working people — not just on-the-job problems like unions.

With an organization like this, millions of working people will be in a much better position to fight for their interests against the rich families. They can begin to prepare themselves to run the economy and the society in the interests of the people.

Labor Party Advocates — initiated by leaders of the 100,000 person Oil, Chemical, and Atomic Workers union — is the only organization that exists today for the sole purpose of building a labor party based on the unions, and open to all for a labor party based on the unions. So the first step toward building a big labor party is to join and build Labor Party Advocates.

Partisans of a revolutionary socialist party should be in the front ranks of this struggle. Workers need a big workers party based on the unions and open to all working people, and a revolutionary socialist party.

To counterpose the struggle for a revolutionary socialist party, to the desire of thousands of workers to have a big workers party open to all working people, can only discredit the struggle for a revolutionary socialist party. — M.G. ■
